

US National Standard in Culture

A Nation's Media In Having Principle

Nancy of Oregon: What principle is in media a combination of the balance of culture with the news, and it was one in which there is a definite guidance on a road of Providence and upkeep that the people themselves had an "editor" that they would see the world after the TV, magazine and journalists had been through to sift out the events of current life. And lead.

Thus the idea of mission is to be repeated over and over.

It is no more remarked in this through the Time's editor, Luce, who saw that whatever he put on the cover of Time magazine the people would follow.

NATHAN the Judge: You see how Luce would keep this standard, the national standard in a refusal to put Sartre the atheist on the cover of Time Magazine. He had a zeal for this mission, that he would not present that which would bring down the United States, that which would corrupt what it is that the United States had in a Christian working.

GOD HELIOS: It is what has come to pass. When it was Luce at the helm of Time magazine, the nation was led to become the #1 nation.

MOSES: It is the standard then. The Ten Commandments is the "principle" of which these three lived under.

That mission has since been subverted to act almost as if we are a third world country such as Mexico, having the 1% rule to rule and control the Media without having morals, ethics, or “principles.”
