

US National Standard in Culture

Jarvis Raymond of New York Times on Work Ethic

Monopoly

JARVIS RAYMOND: What you think of as a work-ethic in the United States is seen in this Dionne Warwick song, Do You Know The Way to San Jose.

ANDREA SELESTOW: She is signing about a historical stream of California, where Silicon Valley began.

NATHAN the Judge: Not seen since. It is where it was possible to begin Microsoft in a garage.

JARVIS RAYMOND: Going forward, monopoly must be broken. It requires an understanding of monopoly that the food service industry has entry and not be prohibitive to begin.

Nancy of Oregon: The franchises in food service can be $200,000. To simply serve food as your occupation, this is monopoly.

JARVIS RAYMOND: Under the new US Constitution, the economic pyramid provides opportunity for low entry jobs to keep the economy strong.