

US National Standard in Culture

Nostredame on Work Ethic

Public Education 10

STEVEN ECKL: The economic pyramid is successful at the return of that king into incarnation to fulfill his mission of an office. The dwelling house will be part of the estate no different than Buckingham Palace is a part of the estate of the royal family.

Harry Luce: The fascism model is commonly seen in capitalism, communism, socialism. These are still using capital to govern here through fascist economic control, one moves power.

J.P. Morgan: However capital is not the only criterion to make a successful company. In today's economy, growth of the company is seen through sales of the same product year after year.

Source: Friendly Fascism, Bertram Gross, 1980

Executive Managers

Karl Marx was one of the first to focus on the expanding role of industrial managers—as distinct from owners—in capitalist enterprise. [His model is based on capitalism. That unless the capitalists are using their money for a money-making venture, we do not have jobs.] While Marx underestimated the managers, others such as John Galbraith went to the other extreme by proclaiming a "managerial revolution" and rule by the "technostructure."

But in a complex system the growing importance of some component— like radar instruments in an airplane—does not mean it is in charge [of the airplane]. Executive managers are, of course, steering instruments, are used as such, and are particularly valued to the extent that they are self-starting and, subject to vague clues from above, self-steering. They can be ruthlessly fired if they fail to accumulate the capital that their overseers deem possible.

The most obvious function of executive management is the production and marketing of goods and services for profits, This is the mighty engine that keeps the wheels of capitalism turning and provides jobs for the great majority of the wage-earning population, the worldly goods for man's consumption or use, and the money and power so essential to satisfy the acquisitive drives of the Ultra-Rich Corporate Overseers.

STEVEN ECKL: See how a Thomas Edison is both the "radar instrument that does not control the plane" and he is also the capitalist.

J.P. Morgan: He founded capital to begin General Electric.

J. Paul Getty: The United States does not excel in its corporations when its primary mission is being a stock & bonds profit motive people. That this author says that the manger is severely punished (ruthlessly fired) is actually true.

Harry Luce: Rather the executive manager is using his spinning Threefold Flame to come out with those various “radar instruments” relevant to the social times and current generations.

Sage of Omaha: This leader is looking in coming out of the university to become a good person. He is not working toward making a good profit picture or a good profit story to occupy Wall Street analysts. Rather he is disappointed if he does not meet his personal goals in the use of his full time and talent.

ANDREA SELESTOW: Around the king is an inner circle. He has his chief mission to direct the inner circle around him. If it is a computer company, then the desktop has to match the laptop, has to match the internet service, phone, and handheld, and not have the product disjointed. All work together without a fuss and confusion.

J. Paul Getty: The inner circle would spend his time in this kingdom to direct that the signature mission be at the high standard and complexity.

J.P. Morgan: The Wall Street organization executive is where a person changes from company to company in the industry with golden parachutes. Rather the inner circle works with the king on its missions. He might stay a few days with each of the areas to make for a uniform product and he commands great authority to slash and burn across platforms.

Bill Gates: The leader has the mission. He has the torch of the king. He carries the torch. And the engineers of the inner circle has the authority of the king.