The Imperial University decree of 1808 laid down the bases of teaching. Among them was:

- Fidelity to the Emperor, the imperial monarchy, and the Napoleonic dynasty.

Marquis Fontanes: Napoleon wanted to have the people of France to focus their attention on the Napoleon dynasty as the defining of the new lifespan for the student and therefore of the nation's well-being. And thereby be for the defending of the nation.

Nancy of Oregon: The values in the United States has been confusing to date as to what is the dynasty it would serve? And it must be concluded that the United States does not do well with having as it raison d'être one of business, laissez faire, free trade-or-black market trade or capitalism.

ANDREA SELESTOW: The United States dynasty was at the time of the Pilgrims through Roger Williams who came to settle in Rhode Island with the work ethic to work out ones salvation. Then you had the Quakers through William Penn who began the city of Philadelphia. You had George Washington who held to the “National Standard”. It was not a laissez faire. It was not either capitalism. But it was one of how one might use the Threefold Flame.

MATHZEDES: The People have since learned the word Love, Wisdom of Truth, the word of Power and Authority of God. And in that space, called the freedom of the United States, they learn what is right and wrong to know how to move ahead in the growing of their talent.

MISSION: IMPOSSIBLE

EMPEROR LeAMTHE: The religion of the United States is called the American religion as it does not appear the same as the religions in Europe. And it is for this use of the Threefold Flame as you see in the outpicturing of talent and (not intrigue) in the Mission Impossible TV series.

Harry Luce: The United States Dynasty is not even the “American Century”. That vision was predicated on the Protestant work ethic, it was predicated on the capitalism, it was predicated on the expansion of the Threefold Flame in the use of talent. Rather, in the test of time, you see that the “American Century” would be one based on the use of the Threefold Flame: LOVE, WISDOM, POWER or FAITH, HOPE, CHARITY.
