B. B. King: New Orleans was an artist center, always a renaissance place for its history whether it was for the cuisine or the music. And it was in this milieu that you have to understand that we expect that music to go forward, and not backward into the jungles of Africa or the riled-up music of the drugheads such as Mick Jagger and John Lennon.

The history of New Orleans was of General Lafayette. It is a high culture brought from France. The music of Scott Joplin was a precursor of one who took classical music and updated it to a freeing joyful sound. In the ragtime music.

What his teacher B.B. King asked him was for an accounting in great anger, saying, "This music you played is not what we taught you!" in great anger. The teachers followed saying, "The gospel music of New Orleans is not what was the old time gospel music!" in anger for Michael Jackson's betrayal.
