

The Teaching of B.B. King 4

Habits of Writing

To Be With Michael Jackson's Teachers

VIEWS OF CHINA

Bunk Johnson: What is this photo saying to you?

B. B. King: This photo is from the 1969's encyclopedia of China. Not so long ago. In this image, you see what the White people used you for not so long ago.

But you see yourself doing this. Slaving for the White person in some manual labor and you see yourself as a draft animal. Do you not!

Fate Marable: You see this woman is being helpful. However what does "helpful" mean! It is you who must determine this!

Louis Armstrong: We moved away from that in the music. However you see that this is the imagery of the White people that they have you stand in another line to get your food, do they not?

Jelly Roll Morton: We put attention on ourselves for the music. And for the gestures as you saw in Michael Jackson. Now, you are asked to go the extra mile.

I am posting for you and asking you to hone up on English skills. Go through the Washington Irving Catholic school book on how to write. Do the first two sections.

And you will be ahead of the White people as they do not have this training.

Secondarily, as you are able, you can go through the grammar book at your pace, doing every single exercise at your pace.

B.B. King: When you see that a White person has this image of you, do take on words that would help you change that image.

Captain Joseph Jones: You are not the image of the Negroids standing by a fence waiting for someone to hire you.

Michael Jackson: This is the deplorable condition of government, that although they freed the slaves, they did nothing furthermore except to confine them to ghettos economically and socially.

What you can do is to carry a book with you. You highlight a passage that you read that shows intelligence. And then you read it to them.

Nancy of Oregon: Stevie Wonder says, "Well, they will hire you to write," (laughter).

Jelly Roll Morton: If you of course would do as I say. You can offer to do reporter writing where they will not go into your district. You can see the changes. That you are not only to be seen as musician, but that you are known as intelligent writers!
