

Canon Law

17th Century Common Law

Typist: The overwhelming response to the 17th Century Common law were people coming out very upset and demanding, “The county we live in, can tell everyone that we in this county do not accept products that say “made in China”. This can go county by county, and certainly if the majority of the counties are in alignment with this purpose, then it is a state wide mandate.”

What they are saying is no matter what the law you have on the books, We the People have a right to say, we will not have any products on the shelves that say “made in China”.

MOSHE: It is not for the common good. It can come under the monopoly laws of a restraint on trade but it is more so that the counties are not a servant to the boot or foreign nations that conspire against the United States.
